Pemberton Greenish strengthens private client team with the addition of Charles King-Farlow

Pemberton Greenish, the specialist property law firm, has announced that Charles King-Farlow will join the firm's Private Client team.

Charles moves to Pemberton Greenish from Birmingham law firm Martineau, where he was working in a consultancy role focusing on private client work with a particular specialism in heritage property and rural landed estates. Previously Charles had retired from Pinsents, where he had been an equity partner for over 30 years. Charles qualified in 1965 and initially worked for Slaughter and May.

In the 1980s Charles joined the Tax and Political Committee of the Historic Houses Association (HHA) and began to advise a number of historic house owners. Charles continues to help the HHA with its Parliamentary lobbying and is currently editing its capital taxes manual. He is also a member of the Heritage Group of Lawyers.

Damian Greenish, Senior Partner at Pemberton Greenish, said:

"We are particularly pleased that Charles King-Farlow is joining us. His appointment is further evidence of our commitment to those with landed estates. His considerable expertise will further strengthen and compliment the work we undertake in the private client team and across the firm for our land owning clients."
